Putnam begged of General Washbondsmen have been obliged to pay large sum on occount of his official defacations. He no doubt expected that the public sympathy, which has been expressed for him in Canada would induce 3000 troops, to post 1000 in ambush in a wood his bondsmen to be very easy with him, and let on each wee of the road near the top of the helf, him off on a promise to pay at some future

He was arrested on civil process, and for want of bail, is now confined in jail there. He will probably have full opportunity to decide on the quertion of taste between an American and British jail, for the civil process in Canada hasa has led to a.

It is stated that immense quantities of flour, and mostly in Michigan and the north season, in order to be shipped to Engthe St. Lawrence; but owing to the want of facilities for transportation, very erying out" kill 'em like rotten sheep!" little of it has even yet reached Montreal. The British wheel'd and fled and Putatler them until signs of the times indicate that navigation will close early this season; and if so, but a very emeli part of this flour can be, sent to England until navigation opens in the spring, when there To the Trustees of the Penobscot Agricultural will probably be no market for it. Thus the advantage intended to be gained by shipping Unprove a dead failure for the most part.

- if J' Yesterday was a meny day for those whe can afford to keep a horse and sleigh, or even to hire one for a few hours. The sleighing about the city was excellent, and the holls kept up a lively tinkling music. It was the first day of good sleighing for the season. We see it stated some time before they can get up anything equal to our snow covered roads.

Man of the Revolution --- An Honored Relic of the Revolution.

-Deagin Ephraim Herrick of Sheridan, now in bis eighty-seventh year, remains to tell of deeds of other times, of "times that tried men's souls," and he loves to tell of Wrshington, of Old Pat and Baron Steuben. During the fast week it wir one good forfine to enjoy an hour in the company of this old mildier, who "fighting his battles o'er again," could not rectiain a hearty righ, as occurred to him, probably the many

Guards; anxious to see the man of whom I had heard much, I started and continued on the run two miles: on coming up to the escert in Broad St., Gen. Washington, with Gen. Miffin by his side, was pointed out, I measured him with my eye, and his dress is now before me, long boots, black velvet breeches and vest, brownish coat McLeod again in Prison --- Stoppage of and a large cocked hat, my first thought was if that's the Commander-in-Chief of the Continental troops we may as well give up first as - A correspondent of the Boston Mail states last! But tefore I was done with him I thought

As the old gentleman was giving the following about way from Montreal with a view of settling As the old gentleman was ground see the young sergeam at the head of his ocotion rush ng torward, crying, charge, boys, charge within two or three nules of each other below the Jerseys in rather an inactive state, the British on a large flat and the Americans on the high ington repeatedly to let him go out and fight the red-coats; Washington at length consented, provided he d do just as he told him. Put premised Washington ordered him to pick out and with the other 2000 go down and enture the British up, but in no wise to give battle until they should gain the hill. The troops were ar-ranged accordingly, and old Put upon his grey horse, brandishing his long heavy broadsword displayed his 2000 men backwards and forwards apon the hill in sight of the British with the hope of drawing them out, but could not succeed: "Goth cut'em boys, we must go down and lick em, form platoons, forward!" They were met by the British, a skirmish ensued. get his engagement with Gen. Washington, until he was reminded by a messenger from Washington himself to order a retreat. He retreated up the hill, the British in close pursuit, till the ambush arose, when Put faced about, and the order was given "Charge bayonet;" old Put his horse was actually reined about by his aid.' From the rull hupphin Suturday Couries The Game of Draughts. AN AMERICAN TALE BY T. S. ARTHUR.

[Concluded.] Thier weeks passed away in practising almost every evening, when John became so much of an adept as to beat his friend at every game.

mined to have a trial with Anne's father. So he dressed himself up and went over. Anna met him at the door, and blushed with oy and confusion. The old man extended his and with a blunt welcome, that had in it some remains of his former cordiality.

Before tea Woodruit talked with Grahum a bout the weather, the farm and the stock. After teg, at which liffle was said, though many glances were exchanged between the lovers, the old man pointed significantly at the checkerboard, and Grahom, with a face suddenly flushed, nodded assent.

Anna's heart Leat audibly in her bosom, and she felt oppressed with a suffocating sensation, as she saw the two draw selently up to the table and begin to arrange their precession the board. It beat quicker still when the moves began, and sank heavily in her bosom after a brief passage of the pieces from square to square for her lover had lost the game. The pieces were again love and your powers of mind both to a test, and replaced, and again the moves commenced. But prove to you that you could do any thing in the the game soon ferminated as the first Twenty games were played before the parties separated, in all of which the old man won. Long before the termination of the evening scontention, An na's pulse had become quiet; although a red spot upon her cheek told that slie felt none the less interested. She had not failed to percieve that, with every renewed game, the period occupied in contesting it became longer than that which went before.

On the next evening Graham came again, and again the draught board was produced. But, some how, or other he could not play even as well as he did on the evening-previous. Anna was disappointed, and he could perceive it, and this not only dispirited him, but wounded his pride. He felt in no pleasant mood as he reurned home that night, half determining not to lower himself again so much in his own estimation as to gamble for the girl he loved- This half-formed resolution he kept for a week, during which time Anna's doubts and fears all returned upon her, and made her sick at heart.

But, much as he disliked draughts, and much as he condemned and even despised the principle involved in the stipulations of Anna's father. all-powerful love again prevailed, and he sought the home of his lady fair to enter the lists once more for her hand. But it was with little better success. Still, there was one compensation for the disappointments that followed every even-1 00 ling's trial and that was, an hour's quiet communion with Anna; for, as long as he would play with the old man, and try, as he of course did, to beat him, he was a welcome visiter, and allowed a fair opportunity to tell over again to the maiden how fondly he leved her.

Six months passed in this way, and young Graham began to play with much skill and judgment, and not unfrequently a game would last for a whole hour. On such occasions the old man would slap him on the shoulder, after he had beat him 'Well done, my boy! The girl will be vours vet!

One day, about this time, it happened that Graham, with his farmer's frock on, was driving his cart along the road that passed near the cottage of his sweetheart. Woodruft happened to meet him just there, and insisted upon his stopning. Graham came in, and drinking a glass of home-brewed beer, made by the fair hands of her he loved, the old man reached down the ever present checker-board.

This may be a lucky day, John,' he said, look--00 ing him archly in the face. Have you a mind to try?

The first sight of the board always annoyed the young man; but he stiffed this feeling, as usual, and sat down to the table. For a little while Anna stood looking at the game, and then retired to attend to her ordinary duties in the family. The mother, too, soon followed, and the players were left alone. The dog, that had partaken of the general feeling of bustle on the entrance of the young man, soon ing himself upon the floor, seemed as deeply engaged in thought as were his bined companions Not a sound was to be heard, except the low noise made in moving the pieces on the board, or the occasional quicker raitling of them when one was taken. Graham never before seemed to have his mind so clea, nor to have so lucid a perception of the principles of the game; and the old man was as much absorbed in what he was doing as ever. About every ten minutes, if there had been another observer in the room, a serious face might have been seen looking in for a few moments at the window, just behind the young man. - 'Jupitor!' suddenly exclaimed the old man, with an uneasy movement, as his antagonist leaped over two pieces and into the kingdom. The relative position of several pieces in the neighborhood of this newly made and first king on the board, was such as to compel Woodruff, in taking care of them, to disarrange entirely his game, and destroy his usual position of advantage. For a few minutes the flush of excitement destroyed the calm, balanced state of young Graham's mind. But he perceived this, and confined his moves to unimportant and safe ones, until his palse heat more quickly. And now came the severest struggle yet. New or never! thought Graham, who readily acknowledged that it was a happy accident rather than skill to which he was indebted for his present decidedly idvantageous position.

For nearly half an hour both parties continued to play with so much caution that but a single piece was taken, but now each seemed determined to bring the game to an issue, and soon the board had nothing on it but four kings two for each. Just at this time Anna came to the window, and seeing the position of affairs, turned pale and felt a sensation of faintness, but she was riveted to the snot. The mother's interest, too, had been excited, and she came to the door and stood also looking upon the board. The old man sat with his hand to his mouth, fingering his lips, his usual position when deepy interested in his favorite game, and Giaham leaned his on hand; his countenance though abstracted, indicating a sidness of feeling mingled with hope. The four kings were near together, and each was evidently intent on reducing that number of the other to one, and then blocking that.

After studying and calculating moves for a bout five minutes, the old man cautiously passed one of his kings to another square. As quick as | gor. thought his antagonist made a move, and then a long pause ensued.

Hurrah!' exclaimed Graham, in a loud voice lifting his head suddenly from his hand- He gave a king for a king, and having the last jump, so alighted as to completely hem in, or block the old man's only remaining king, thus winning the game at the last extremity. Hurrib. hurrah, hurrah " he cried, and leaned back in an eccurey of delight.

For a moment or two the old man seemed cha grined at his defeat, but he recovered himself

Now, my bay, you have frirly won har, and she is yours. Come here, pet, he said to Anna, who appeared at the door, pressing in by her mother, and name your wedding day

It is needless to tell how Anna blushed, or how her little heart leaped for joy in her bosom. It is of more moment to say that in one month the twain were one flesh. This made him feel quite uplifted, and he deter-

After the knot had been tied, and the young folks full of noisy merrunent, Ms. Woodruff said to his new-made-son

And now can you tell, John, why I made you beat me at draughts before I would let you BEE have my little pet there, who looks happier, and hope is happier than I have ever seen her be-

Indeed I do not,' said the young man serious-"I always felt it to be a piece of uncalled for cruelty to both."

'Here you were mistaken my boy.' replied the old man smiling. . 'You have one detect of character and I saw it. You distrust your own powers. It was but one week before you asked: me for Anna's hand, that, in a conversation, your old me that you could not do a certain thing. It involved difficulty and applie then, but at these was necessary that you should-do it to know your own powers! I determined then, that as soon as you asked for my child, I would put your prove to you that you could do any thing in the range of human capacity, if you tried. Have I not succeeded in showing to you that Fean't' are not words to be used in your dictionary?

The going inan looked his monitor in the face with silent surprise and, the latter added.

And now my, dear boy, I trust that you will nover again doubt your natural ability when brought in comparison with the natural powers of another. Patience and perseverance will surmount all obstacles. Make these your companions, and you will fast rise in intelligence, influence and usefulness, above the crowd who are content to be ignorant.'

By This Morning's Mail-Arrest of a Minister.

The Rev. Mr.-Knapp has been arrested in Providence on an action for slander, the damages being laid at $10,000. He was bailed by two of his friends. The Journal says, "various opinions are entertained as to the propriety of his sermons; by some they are much admired, while others think them deficient in taste and christian obarity."

In one of his sermons, he made some remarks against the Universalists, and in reply to a question he made, a lady rose and answered. :At subsequent meetings he made some remarks derogutory to the character of this lady, and also we believe, of her family, and which caused the prosecution.

The Mendi Negroes.

The 35 surviving Africans of the Amistad emnarked at New York on wednesday last for Africa, in the Bark Gentleman, bound to Sieria Leone, which was on the same day towed down the harbor by a steamer. They are accompanied by the Rev. Messrs. Steele and Raymond and Mrs. Raymond, Missionaries, and Messrs. Wilson and wife, teachers. Before their departure several public meetings were held in New York, which were attended by many persons, particularly by friends of the missionary enterprise, connected with the return of the Mendians. A leter is published, addressed by a committee of the Mendians to Mr. J. Q. Adams, thanking him for his services in their behalf in arguing their cause, and accompanied by a present of a bible. The answer of Mr. Adams is also published.

From Port Phillip accounts of the 2d. of June give herrifying particulars of the-murder of Mr. Morton and his servant by the blacks in the interior. In the month of May last. The Port Phillip Gazette of that date contains a letter from Coach Windows, &c., constantly on hand. the party who discovered the bodies. Describing the discovery, he says: "A little on the right of the track I observed what I considered first was a white log, with a large eagle-hawk perching upon it; upon my nearer approach the bird rose slowly and heavily from the mangled remains of poor Mr. Morton.

He was stripped quite naked and lying on his face the greater part of which was actually cut away ; his head is one mass of frightful wounds, and many bruises on different parts of his arms and body, which is torn by birds of prey. About fifty yards off lay the remains or skeleton of Larry, from whose bones the flesh had been completely cut off. The skin was cut a lattle above the wrist and ancies with a sharp knif or instrument; from all other parts the flesh was cut, and nothing left but bare bones. God only knows whether they did not do this before life was extinct, as the struggle with him had been long and dreadful. His arms were, extended, and were speared through the wrists to the ground. The seene of the horrible murder was a place called

Sugar.

It is now ascertained beyond doubt that the crop of sugar in Louisiana will be cut short about one-third by the late frosts. The frost was earlier this season than usual, and at the same time cane was less matured, in consequence of the fine growing seasons immediately preceding hence the juice of the cane is very weak, re-quiting a much larger quantity to a pound of sugar than customary. Baton Rogue Gaz.
